UDIA Urban Development Institute of Australia QUEENSLAND

UDIA Urban Edge Skill Series
Cutting through the Green-wash

Sustainable development has become a widely recognised concept following substantial scientific research and broad media coverage in recent years. With the rapid population growth in Queensland there is clearly a need to develop our towns and cities carefully to reduce their environmental impact and conserve our resources. The business case for sustainable development has also developed substantially, with sustainability features now highly valued by home buyers, tenants and government.

Natalie Wilde, Manager Building Reform Program Branch – Department of Infrastructure & Planning will present on new and amended legislation as it pertains to the development or residential and commercial projects.

Ian Purssey, Development Manager – Urban Land Development Authority will provide an overview on how to integrate cutting edge sustainability with affordability in the current climate.

Stephen Harrison, Project Manager – Heritage Pacific will present on the practical implementation and associated challenges of leading a sustainable development project.

This event will look at the new and amended legislation relating to sustainable developments in Queensland, as well as including presentations from developers who have already undertaken projects incorporating significant sustainable initiatives.
